Candidiasis (Yeast Infection)

What is Candidiasis?

Candidiasis, sometimes called moniliasis or a yeast infection is a fungal infection of any of the Candida species, of which Candida albicans is the most common, on the skin and/or mucous membranes. Although yeast is normally a harmless inhabitant of the digestive system and vaginal area, it may cause an infection when the skin is damaged or when conditions are warm and humid, or when a child or an adult has a depressed immune system. Antibiotics can also cause yeast to grow, because the normal bacteria in tissues are killed, letting the yeast grow unhampered.

What are the symptoms of Candidiasis?

The symptoms of candidiasis vary depending on the location of the infection. The following are the most common symptoms of a yeast infection. However, each person may experience symptoms differently. Symptoms may include:

Conventional Medical Opinion

Alternative Medical Opinion

How is Candidiasis diagnosed?

In addition to a medical history and physical examination, your physician may scrape off a skin sample to confirm the diagnosis with a microscope or a culture.

How is Candidiasis diagnosed?

On a non-work day take one Candida-G capsule and see if you have die off symptoms (feeling tired/flu like feelings). If you feel the symptoms you know you have Candidiasis.

Conventional Treatment for Candidiasis: DRUGS

All drugs (prescription and over-the-counter) — some are worse; antibiotics kill everything outright — slow down the action of peristalsis (a series of coordinated, rhythmic muscle contractions that occur throughout the length of the gastrointestinal tract), which causes food to either ferment or rot in your colon, which is a death sentence to your friendly bacteria and eventually to you.

Alternative Treatment for Candidiasis:

Gargle am and pm with a freshly made (every other day) solution of Candida-G (and then spit it out), and take 2 Flora-G Plus capsules am and pm, gradually increasing to 4 Flora-G Plus capsules am and pm over a 2 to 3 month period. When you can take 8 Flora-G Plus capsules a day without feeling die-off symptoms (feelings of tiredness or flu like feelings) add one (or more) Candida-G capsules per day. Continue for life.

If you have little or no symptoms just 1 of the flora-g per day for mantaince.
